A model of latin american city structure

CBD of Mexico

Paseo de la reforma, mexico city spine. This “mexican miracle mile” which forms the part of the CBD, is an area of skyscrapers.

A new government built school rises in the background of a typical squatter settlement in Mexico City, an indication of the gradual modernization of these poverty zones that takes place over time, although seldom fast enough to keep pace with new in-migrants from the rural areas.

The zocalo, in downtown Mexico City, is the cultural & financial centre of the nation. It shows a mix of 19th century colonial style architecture & modern skyscraper.

Visitors from the United States Know Well the Hotel, Restaurant, and Amusement Center of the Mexican Capital

The gleaming Palace of Fine Arts (center), a combined theater and art gallery, stands in a slight depression caused by its sinking during construction. Thousands of tons of liquid concrete were pumped into the spongy subsoil. The setback skyscraper (right) is La Nacional, tallest office building in the capital.
